AutoIMS Promotes Williams to Chief Technology Officer
Veteran Leader Takes Full Technology Reigns at AASC

May 2019; Atlanta, GA Auto Auction Services Corp. (AutoIMS) is pleased to announce the appointment of Robert Williams to the newly-created position of Chief Technology Officer. In his new role, Williams takes on comprehensive responsibility for the entire technology team, including development, database, systems administration, and testing. The promotion recognizes Williams's ability to help shape short- and long-term strategy while also managing a diverse and highly-skilled technology team.

Prior to this appointment, Robert served as the Chief Software Architect for the company, managing development work and transforming remarketing industry challenges into meaningful technology solutions. Williams, one of the first employees of AutoIMS, is credited for designing and overseeing the development of most software and features benefitting AutoIMS clients today.

AutoIMS CEO, Venkat Krishnamoorthy added, "Robert's 20-years of success demonstrates a legacy of growth, innovation, and passion. Robert enjoys working with our clients to solve problems and believes passionately that we can help many more people do their best work by removing technological barriers."

Following his chemical engineering degree from MIT, Williams worked at Honeywell on multi-variable control systems to help optimize refinery and paper mill operations. At AutoIMS, Robert learned SQL, servlets, jsp, javascript and numerous other burgeoning technologies over the years.

Asked about his goals in his new role, Robert said, "I want to work with Venkat and our entire team to move AutoIMS strongly and stably into the coming decade. We'll continue to deliver reliable processes, new features, and dependable client support, striving to be the provider of choice for our industry."
